

When Buying a Refrigerator Get the Best

The Food Bill, the Ice Bill, and the Doctor Bill are closely related.

This fact is becoming better understood every year, and to-day very few people are satisfied with anything but the most perfect of refrigerators, gladly doing without something else, rather than risk the family's health with a poor refrigerator.

We handle the Monarch line of refrigerators. They are made by manufacturers who know how to construct the Best in a refrigerator. Built of the best materials obtainable, and we believe we have the refrigerator ideal, reasonable in price, built to last and give economical service.

Ash cases, white enamel or galvanized lined. Top icing and side icing features. Prices from $16.65 to $31.50. Investigation will cost you little.

A welcoming reception was given to Private Allen Nixon, a YD soldier, at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nixon, just over the line in the town of Orange Friday night, there being about 100 persons present to enjoy the festivities. The occasion was one of the great pleasure to all, dancing furnishing part of the entertainment and refreshments of cake and coffee being served.

Three other YD men in uniform were present, they being Ira and Harold Cheever and Irving Cross, who were former members of Co. C, 1st Vermont.

On Saturday night, Chairman C. W. Melcher of the Barre Victory loan committee received the following telegram from N. Penrose Hallowell, executive chairman of the New England campaign: "At noon to-day New England district had 86 per cent of quota officially tabulated. Present indications are that every New England state will exceed quota by a reasonable margin. Congratulations to splendid local organizations which make this result possible." Since that time it has been announced that the quota of New England was over-subscribed. The Barre committee hopes to be able to make report of the total subscription for Barre within a short time.

Clan Gordon continues to receive her hero members most cordially as they return from overseas, presenting each a gift to show their gratitude towards those who aided in the world's great cause. James Thompson, who was severely wounded while a member of the 103d supply company, and Charles Riddell of G company, 101st ammunition train, both of the 26th division, were the two last honored Saturday evening in Clan Gordon hall. The dancing was a praiseworthy presentation of two solid gold signet rings to the guests. Both responded with fitting words for the hearty reception and tokens of esteem prepared for them by so many friends. Refreshments were then served, after which followed merry making and dancing until midnight. The committee in charge consisted of the following people: Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Christie, Mr. and Mrs. John Gray, A. Coutts, A. Cormick, A. Faulkner, A. Kirtin, W. Milne, Mrs. Mary Angus, and Mrs. Mary Fraser.

CURRENT COMMENT

What Asher C. Hinds Did.

When Asher C. Hinds finished in 1907 the colossal literary task of assembling the "Precedents of the House of Representatives," he said in his introduction to the eight great volumes that if his work would contribute to the maintenance of a system of procedure conducive to an efficient performance of the duties of the House he would feel that the labor of preparation had not been in vain. There has never been a doubt of the great usefulness of his work. Some of the men who were not in Congress before Mr. Hinds finished his "Precedents" must wonder how the House ever got along without this history of its parliamentary past, this complete record of the decisions of America's most active legislative body upon that which has come to be recognized as an important branch of law. In a way Mr. Hinds did for the parliamentary law of the United States what Blackstone did for English law, except that the American did not color the record with his own opinions or theories, but contented himself with putting the full collection of precedent where all could reach it instantly.

It is almost a surprise to find that Mr. Hinds, who has just died, was only 58 years old, for his name had been associated with parliamentary practice for a quarter of a century. He was young, only 26, when he first went to Washington as Speaker Reed's clerk. Luckily, for the House, he was a man whose interest went further than the mere duty to which he was assigned. He saw that the parliamentary records of the House were being swallowed by the jungle of time to such an extent that memory could no longer be expected to penetrate the wilderness; and so he set out to clear a path. To any young historian who may shrink from an appalling piece of work we suggest an inspection of the eight volumes, each twice the size of an ordinary law book, which Hinds completed in less than 15 years, all the while performing his ordinary duties either as speaker's clerk or as parliamentary clerk of the House.

It was some reward for a good man when Hinds was sent to the House by a constituency which had lost Thomas B. Reed, Hinds' friend and mentor and himself the author of another parliamentary classic, "Reed's Rules." These two men, both from the same Maine district, did more to clarify the methods of congressional progress than any others. Reed's was largely a labor of pure intellect, but Hinds' work was to clean an Augean stable a hundred years old. It was perhaps the most complex and exhausting task of its kind ever assumed by a single individual, and there is no doubt that it shortened by a decade or more the life of the resolute man who, having seized it, would not let it go.—New York Sun.
